RATIONALE

Why do I need this course?

Field Placement is an integral part of the Human Services Curriculum. Through the opportunity of applying concepts from the classroom to life situations, the student not only gains understanding, but also develops skills in the art of working with people and in agencies. Field placement introduces students to agency policies, services, daily routine and worker activities. It also provides opportunities, through supervised experienced, to develop skills in observation, communication, therapeutic activities, and appropriate documentation.
