RATIONALE

Why do I need this course?

The ability to communicate with spoken and written language is a uniquely human trait. Human babies first communicate their needs to parents by crying. Children add single words, short sentences, and then complete sentences to their vocabularies. By the time humans reach adulthood, much more sophisticated communications skills are demanded of us. We must be able to communicate in an appropriate manner with our employees, our peers, and our supervisors.

SPC 205 is designed to give the student experience with “real-life” speaking situations. You will find yourself having to give information about a subject, persuading others that your way is the best way, and discussing a problem with co-workers to come up with a workable solution.

PROGRAM INFORMATION

For program information including required courses, program learning outcomes, gainful employment information and advisement information, refer to the Academic Program webpage. Go to Academics (http://www.ptc.edu/academics), select your program, and then select Credentials Offered.

COURSE STUDENT LEARNING OUTCOMES

Upon successful completion of this course and/or clinical, each student will be able to:

- Identify specific problems that often lead to failure in spoken communication.
- Listen actively and evaluate what others say according to specialized criteria.
- Utilize prescribed criteria to determine the speaker’s credibility.
- Participate in problem-solving group discussions.
- Organize and deliver a researched informative speech, a process speech, a persuasive speech, and a group discussion speech that show clarity, conciseness, confidence, and poise.
- Use natural gestures, movements, and facial expressions while speaking.
- Prepare appropriate visuals aids to accompany oral presentations.
- Present introductions which engage the attention of the audience, establish your credibility as a speaker, and indicate the direction of the speech.
- Present conclusions which effectively summarize ideas; offer conclusions based on the presented evidence, or challenge the audience to act; give conclusions which make the speech memorable and leave the audience in an appropriate frame of mind.
- Use transitions which make your thought patterns clear, provide clues to upcoming points, and review the previous points.
- Control the rate, tone, volume, and pitch of your voice.
- Enunciate words clearly and pronounce them correctly.
- Use language which is clear, vivid, precise, and appropriate to the occasion and purpose of the speech.
- Use standard American English grammar and usage in your speeches.
- Maintain eye contact with the audience.
- Effectively use outlining.
